

Chapter 1: Profile of High School Feeders

This chapter is comprised of five sections, each of which provides a different aspect of the feeder high schools described in this report. In Section 1.1, the feeder high schools selected for this report are categorized as either “district” or “non-district” feeders. Institutional characteristics of the selected high school are discussed in Section 1.2. Section 1.3 focuses on the demographic and academic characteristics of the 2001-02 senior class for each high school. Students who enroll at SDCCD while still in high school reflect one aspect of the feeder high schools. The extent to which these students persist is explored in Section 1.4. Another aspect of the feeder high schools is the percent of students who eventually earn an associate degree or certificate at SDCCD. In Section 1.5, associate degree and certificate recipients in 2002 are reported by their high school of origin.

Section 1.1 District and Non-district Feeders

This report provides information on two types of high school feeders: (1) district feeder – defined as those high schools located within the district’s service area zip codes, and (2) non-district feeder – other San Diego County area high schools. Although there are close to 100 non-district feeder high schools in San Diego County, only those that had 10 or more first-time students enrolled at SDCCD were included. A list of the 20 district feeder and 18 non-district feeder high schools described in this report is provided in Table 1. It should be noted that all of the high schools identified as “district” feeders are from the San Diego Unified School District.
